The pilgrimage is celebrated with horse carriages, floats and trucks lavishly decorated with flowers, banners and flags.

Along the way, riders and bullfighters on horseback accompany them to create a thundering celebration that features performances of music and dancing.

The pilgrimage culminates in the early hours of the morning when the procession arrives in El Rocío, a small village in the heart of the Doñana National Park.

So come witness the beauty and grandeur of the Romería de El Rocío and experience a unique part of Spanish culture and history. The Romeria del Rocio pilgrimage is one of Andalusia's oldest and largest celebrations and arguably Spain's most traditional feria. Its roots can be traced back to the 13th century when, according to the popular story, a local hunter from the village of Villamanrique came upon a statue of the Virgin Mary in a hollowed-out tree trunk in Doñana national park (a must visit in its own right).

Spaniards travelling to El Rocio from elsewhere in Andalusia often make the journey in the same way as the pilgrims of three hundred years ago did.

Women wear the beautiful flamenco dresses – trajes de gitanas or gypsy dresses – similar to the ones they show off at the big ferias and men wear smart grey trousers, short riding jackets and wide-brimmed hats.

People start arriving into El Rocio on the Friday before Pentecost Monday, transforming the town from a sleepy idyll to a scene of endless processions, competitions and parties. Endless rocieras – songs about the pilgrimage that sound like flamenco – are sung around spitting, glowing campfires.

In the early hours of Pentecost Monday morning, the weekend's partying reaches its finale and the statue of the El Rocio virgin (known as the White Dove) is brought out of her church and paraded around each chapel in town.

A ritual with over 500 years of history, the Romería de El Rocío is rooted in the culture of the neighbouring Andalusian towns and is marked by its reverence for the Virgen del Rocío.

The faithful come together in a large procession of pilgrims, led by horseback riders that zigzag toward the Hermandad del Rocío. This procession is accompanied by the sound of drums, singing, and traditional music. Once the procession reaches the Hermandad del Rocío, pilgrims celebrate and pray either in the chapel or outside in the sunshine. This is followed by four days of festivities, including parades of horse riders, traditional foods, and plenty of music and dancing.

Participants come from all over the province, dressed in traditional clothing and riding horseback in a show of pride and joy. The festivities take place over a week-long period and many visitors join in on the joyous parade to the town center, where the Virgin of El Rocío is venerated and celebrated. From lively dances in the streets to fireworks and concerts, the celebration of The Romería de El Rocío is a spectacle to behold.

In the early hours of Pentecost on Monday morning, the weekend feast reaches its end and the statue of the Virgin El Rocío (known as the white dove) is brought out of its church and brought in a parade around each chapel of the city. While doing the big tour of her, the different confraternities are loudly asking for the privilege of bringing her to the next chapel; The pilgrims go and push each other to touch the glass display case in which it is transported and the adults cry for the emotion while swaying and jumps.
